Historical/Biographical Notes

Anthony H. Coppola was born in Douglas on December 20, 1916 and died in Douglas at his home on May 26, 1990.

Coppola graduated from Douglas High School, the Class of 1934. After high school, he attended Vesper George School of Art and Rhode Island School of Design. He worked at Hayward Woolen Mill as a superintendent for 16 years, before becoming an Insurance Consultant for 17 years.

After assisting Lucius J. Marsh, Jr. (Town Assessor, Town Clerk and Local Historian) with research for his work "A History of the places, home and people in the town of Douglas", Coppola began working on his own research. For fifteen years, he explored the history of Douglas and collected photographs and stories from families in town. Coppola then wrote his own work, They raced horses on Main Street : Douglas, Massachusetts, recalling an era, 1868-1908, which was published in 1990. The premise of his work was not a history, but instead an insight into the everyday life of the town during that 40-year era.

Anthony H. Coppola was very involved in the life and politics of Douglas, Massachusetts. He worked at restoring old homes, was a member of the School Committee (1950-1953), Chair for the Douglas-Sutton School Union, consultant for the Douglas Historical Commission, and founding member of the Douglas Historical Society, Inc.

Coppola, along with his wife Charlotte, wrote articles and histories about the Town of Douglas, as well as giving talks at the historical society and schools.

The Anthony H. Coppola Collection was donated by Charlotte E. Coppola and family to the Douglas Historical Society and the Simon Fairfield Public Library. It was the family's intention that Coppola's research would be accessible to those that are interested in the history of the Town of Douglas and its people.

Scope and Content
